Puerto Vallarta, Mexico, 16 April 2012 – More than 250 leaders from business, government and civil society are meeting in Mexico for the World Economic Forum’s Young Global Leaders Annual Summit.

The participants, all of whom are under the age of 40 when selected and successful in their own fields, represent the future of leadership. They share a commitment to work as a community to shape a more positive, peaceful and prosperous society.

The programme of the Annual Summit includes sessions aimed at producing global public policy recommendations. Participants are encouraged to examine complex systems with the aim of identifying where they can intervene with solutions to global challenges.

Young Global Leaders are actively engaged in launching and leading initiatives that enable them to learn from and with each other; build knowledge and engender a better understanding of global challenges and trends, risks and opportunities; and further enhance their role as leaders within their own organizations.

“ One of the unique aspects of the Young Global Leaders Community is that it is the first generation of leaders who are truly global citizens; they have all lived, studied and worked in different countries throughout their careers, ” said David Aikman, Head of The Forum of Young Global Leaders.

“ They see themselves as being fundamentally interconnected and have the cross-cultural leadership skills to be successful in a globalized world. Thanks to the incredible diversity of the group, they are able to collaborate across complex systems and build informal coalitions to facilitate action on the biggest challenges facing the world today. This entrepreneurial approach to public good is the best way to move the world forward, ” he added.

The Young Global Leaders Annual Summit is being held in conjunction with the World Economic Forum on Latin America.
