

World Economic Forum on Africa: Raising the bar as African Success Story Continues to Gather Pace

7 June 2007

Geneva, Switzerland, 8 June 2007 – More than 700 participants from 42 countries will participate in the 17th annual World Economic Forum on Africa, which will take place next week in Cape Town from 13 to 15 June. Under the theme “Raising the Bar” the agenda for this year’s meeting will focus on building capacity for success. Representatives and experts from governments, business, international organizations and civil society will focus on leveraging Africa’s increasingly strategic role in the global arena. The meeting will feature innovative partnerships to sustain growth, address human and infrastructure capacity constraints and assess opportunities for an improved African investment climate.

“ There really is a sense now that we are moving into a new phase of Africa’s development. To be sure, problems remain – but they are increasingly crowded out by the hundreds of success stories from across the continent which have permanently shifted the debate on Africa from one of dependence to one of independence and business success. What we are talking about now is a virtuous circle that will continue to improve the state of Africa and its people, raise the bar for the continent and make success stories the norm. The World Economic Forum on Africa will demonstrate that the African success story really is gathering pace,” said Haiko Alfeld, Director and Head of Africa at the World Economic Forum.

Heads of state from Africa who have already confirmed their participation include: Thabo Mbeki, President of South Africa; Armando Emilio Guebuza, President of Mozambique; Pakalitha Mosisili, Prime Minister of Lesotho; Levy Mwanawasa, President of Zambia; and Abdoulaye Wade, President of Senegal. Other prominent figures who will participate are: Kofi Annan, UN Secretary-General (1997-2006), now deeply engaged in African-led development and governance initiatives on the continent, and Donald Kaberuka, President, African Development Bank, Tunis.
